FUNDAMENTAL

The project is about improving functional digital literacy, addressing mainly two key digital competences: communication/collaboration and digital content creation, both linked to improved performance in the school environment. As we believe that students do not possess sufficient computer skills and are not digitally literate enough to be successful in the digital world, we want to introduce and teach them how to communicate appropriately and effectively for educational purposes, but also more broadly (netiquette). We want to focus on the rules and etiquette of writing formal and informal e-mails, and raise awareness of successful communication in order to improve their quality of life and success at school. The creation and use of presentations are often an integral part of communication in an educational environment, so it is important that students develop the skills to use these tools effectively. We want to teach learners to present their knowledge successfully and to a high quality, which includes understanding the basic functions and tools in presentation software, including setting text, inserting images, using graphs and other design elements; we want to empower them to create visually appealing and varied and effective presentations that support and complement the spoken word. In doing so, we want them to be aware of the concept of copyright in the use of images, charts and other elements in presentations, and to respect the rules of use. In all activities, students will improve their language and communication skills. They will take part in peer learning. They will improve ICT skills, especially those related to communication, cooperation and presentation.
